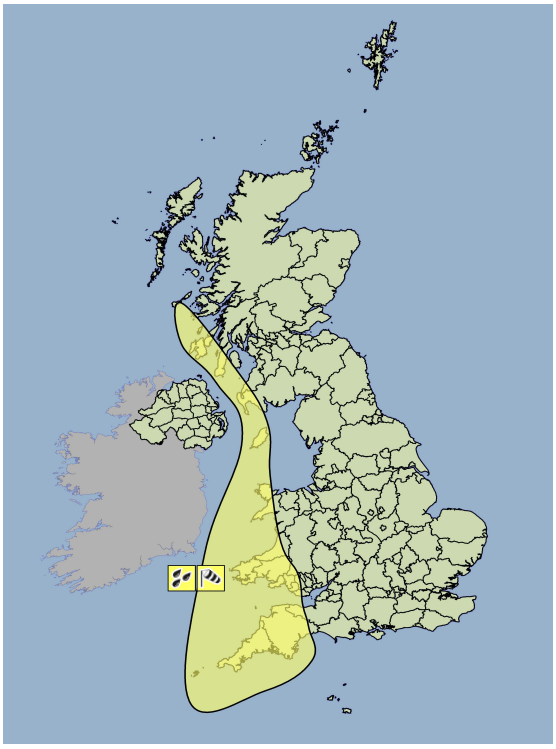
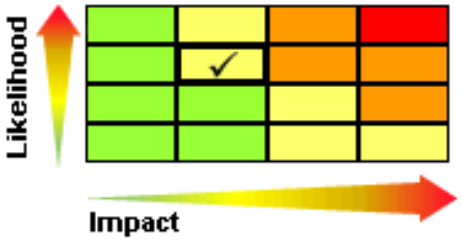
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A small but active depression will move quickly northwards during Thursday, bringing a short-lived period of gales and severe gales, particularly in areas exposed to the south. The region of strongest gusts will progress from the southwest of England during the morning, through areas adjoining the Irish Sea in the afternoon, before clearing from western Scotland in the early evening. There will also be spells of rain, some heavy, giving 10-20 mm fairly widely and locally 30 mm in southwest Wales, Cornwall and western Scotland.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain and Wind

Valid from 07:00 on Thu, 13th Nov 2014 until 23:45 on Thu, 13th Nov 2014

Southerly gales are expected to affect the warning area during Thursday with the potential for a small low pressure centre to develop and move north which could generate an area of severe gales with gusts 60-70 mph within its circulation. Spells of rain, some heavy, are also likely in these western areas during Thursday.

The public should be aware of the risk of some disruption to travel from both wind and rain. Localised flooding is possible, particularly with the rain falling onto already saturated ground over southwest England and southern parts of Wales, whilst the strength of the wind may be sufficient to bring down some trees.

This is an update to the earlier wind warning to be a dual wind and rain warning.
